

Cynthia Hill is Senior Director of State and Local Affairs at the Family Research Council. In this capacity she works with state legislators and leaders, as well as with approximately 50 state Family Policy Councils (FPCs) and other like-minded organizations across the country. She is regularly involved in FPC strategic and legislative planning and advises on state model legislation and testimony. She also networks with other organizations in educational and legislative efforts that help promote Family Research Council and its mission.

Cynthia has earned a B.A. in Religion, a B.S. in Human Services, and an M.A. in Social and Domestic Public Policy. She managed her family's business in Delaware and later operated her own for 12 years. A former homeschooling parent, she has authored and taught elementary, secondary, and post-secondary curricula. She has also taught a variety of college courses online in the areas of ethics, criminal justice, healthcare technology, persuasive writing, critical thinking, etc. Prior to joining FRC, Cynthia worked as a lobbyist in the Virginia General Assembly and as Vice-President of Development for The Family Foundation of Virginia.
